The first thing that caught my attention was the beautiful cover. The brown mug filled with variegated color pencils looking outwards seemed to be a loud metaphorical voice that made its presence strongly felt. The cover suggested an outburst of creativity and flowering of art.

The book is written in a simple, honest, heartfelt and lucid language. Its honest narration is indeed out of the box. The book is a perfect embodiment of a silent voice and aloud struggle of the protagonist. It's a veil that reflects pearl of thoughts and if one reads with an open mind, he/she will realize that book is a window of opportunity to awaken one's belief in the power of dreaming. It's tinged with the hue of hope and optimistic approach towards life on each and every page.

The mother's role in Rohan's life is painted in such an impeccable manner. The canvas of Rohan's life creates a wheel of thoughts in a reader's mind and presents immense value to the subtle mind. The struggle, the successes and the failures, all create an indelible impression in the minds of reader.

Other supporting characters like friends of the protagonist and teachers were also well thought of but they lacked some depth in their development. The pace of the plot slows down in the later part of the story but it is a quick read and delightful one.

The conversations are laid down perfectly and the mother's character continues to radiate inexplicable positive energy and confidence. It will impart its readers with a hero like strength.

This book is not just a self help book. It's a story that needs to be told to every child and parent.

World needs more stories like this one. I heard from Ravikiran's father that he had written this book in his school time. I think this is a unique novel and deserves thumbs up.

I give this book 4 stars out of 5. Good job, Ravikiran and Sapna!
