Consumer of History

Banking on inherited memories rejuvenates me.

As and when I remember the memories

That me and my people long to cherish

And those me and my people despise to relish

To remember not as memoirs

But as inerasable scars.

The nation, the geography, the war, the leaders

The language, the temples, the forts and those statues,

and the ethnicity

Then comes the innate xenophobia

That declares me and my people as more equal than others;

And others do live in History's mischief,

Bloodshed as part of the living

And for the living of me and my people,

And the making of the histories

That I and my people have today

As glorious moments of the past for the present

But for those who produced this wicked 'hero'

That is unexplainable.

The Unforgettable's enigmatic inexplicable
 And this makes me feel the heroic deeds
 And the unheroic moments as great periods
 And people who built that fort and this temple.
 I only consume History.

Producer of History

Learning from the past bloopers
 I reconstruct the future through THIS present.
 And those present here.
 There is NO present as such
 For humans live in past glories
 And memories that are painful
 To think about the future
 And the prospective futures.
 Those (are) perceived either in fear or in hyper ambitions.
 The past seems to me
 A mere wars-the wars fought
 For a feudal by feudals
 Or those whose slaves-
 (Both physical and social)
 Those kings and their courtesans
 Those numerous wives and those concubines

The titles and the moribund army
 The modern PROMOTERS of democracy
 Yet the common man was ‘there’
 But not living.
 I exterminate all the above
 Including the democracy,
 The dictatorship of the prolitere,
 The religious kingdom, the Islamic republic.
 Egalitarian society for all- the inclusive growth.
 I will have equality
 Where people are equal
 In all but something
 Giving room for
 Those like I who would like to produce
 History- future history.
 I produce History
 Not for History’s sake
 For myself – my sake.
