

Never Again

Anjali PR

Independent Researcher

MA English and Comparative Literature

Central University of Kerala

I yearned for happiness
They said bring a life
You will need no more

The journey towards a bump was rather bumpy ceaseless visits for jabs give joy so I was made to believe.

A surprising visitation after a long haul
Indeed it knocked at my heart
My joy knew no bounds

But very soon I knew my boundaries
My insides wanted to be outside
Till I convinced that it is guarded inside

As summer gave way to winter
A cherub came into being
The bundle left me ineffable

As MY days and nights became longer
I quiveringly retreated to pensivity
You will need no more echoed in my ears

Never again will I yearn for happiness
I told myself