
IN SEARCH OF FRIENDSHIP

Isolation itself cries against the silence
As childhood vanished at the start of spring
Mine empty hands rub and clench
Remembering those childish longing.

Far, far away now thee
Thy smiles still lives in my dairy
The same swing and the banyan tree
I don't know why friendship promote betray and folly.

Those days when I ran into naked butts
And thine shined in the bright daylight
Things changed as day to night and the same suddenly shuts
Everything momentarily from the sight.

Many seasons came and gone
The birds chirping for the lost soul
Abandoned in the meadow alone
Looking forward a hope to howl.

Thee depart with a promising sound
And time flew on and on
While silence surged around
To find my companion.

Those thoughts still embedded in me
As Krishna loves Shudama eternally.
