Since the day she born
She becomes someone's pawn!
Always in dilemma where she belongs
Her dreams are not just dreams
Those are her identity's metabolisms.

Huge Cosmos!
But not a little space to consider her own
Her paradigm lies in her Shattered dreams
Out of societal demand
She succumbs to take the path of uncanny coronation
Although never given to do her own

Worship as Shakti
Devotee
The nature lies in her womb
Ventures whenever path leads
Revolves throughout until her final breathe
Only handful lead towards their Goal
Rest work on!

Evolve
How transparent she is!
Takes everything on her lap
She is the strongest soul,
She knows she has the entire Cosmos
Thus, she never ask a Space, A House of her Own

Cursed

Cursed!

Being treated like a scrap
The eldest,
Out of four in line
Born out of nowhere
A discarded life form

All family is not divine
The tale none has utter
The fact cannot be consoled

Cursed since the day,
The Prey understands the world
From the Dawn till the Dark

Where the bearer gets the title of Fortune
However,
To her the giver turns out to be the destroyer of Esteem
It is not the destiny, the fate who trick
It is the giver itself who wishes for her downfall!

Living under a roof as a Unit
Not always implies sacred and fortunate
Sometimes, it is just the artificiality of Life
Disguise in form of curse not unties

The poem “House of Her Own” is based on lives of women as a whole, who throughout their lives never get the recognition as the real holder of the family, rather they have been treated like guest in their Parents’ home. They have shifted positions, as their place shifted from their maternal home to Spouse’s house after marriage. Yet, they are not able to consider any of them as their own Home. Whereas, a few women able to surpass this limit and prove themselves in owning their space with lots of hardship, get victory.

The next poem “Cursed” is untold dilemma of those children, youths, individual who have been treated badly by their family, discourage them, and curse them for not being productive, where unemployment is the main cause.

The primary aim of these writings is to cater consciousness among the populace everywhere so that they can realize the dilemma of each individual in various spheres and therefore empower themselves with proper skilled-based education.
